Mexico Comes to Hollywood Thus "Viva Villa" Is Ended

Photo by Charles Rhodes

all the long shots carefully made, the weary outfit trekked back to the U. S. A. to finish the close-ups. They brought with them a Mexican Mexican and authentic.

platform of a railroad train. That scene, like and rough to be given a place in the government for which he has fought.

Pancho (on the steps) is saying goodbye to

PLENTY of heartaches and headaches and good American dollars went into the filming of "Viva Villa," down in Mexico. So, when the bulk of the picture was finished and when the picture was finished his pal, Johnny Sykes (Stuart Erwin), American newspaper man. Standing below Pancho handsome and wealthy hacendero (Donald is General Sierra (Leo Carrillo), the genial Cook), and beside him stands the traitor, Pasloves. By her side stands President Madero base and you see Director Jack Conway, executed, it is an ambitious undertaking, a (Henry B. Walthall), the tragic figure for tensely supervising the shooting of the se-spectacular production.

assassin. On the platform is the proud and cal (Joseph Schildkraut).

It's a final scene in a picture that has been lovely Mexican girl (Fay Wray) whom Pancho

Follow the microphone boom down to its long and difficult in the making. Carefully